A new chewing gum is being manufactured to aid against tooth decay

A new product is soon to be on the market to help battle tooth decay. Yoghurt chewing gum will soon make an appearance in the UK, promoting healthy chewing.

The gum will contain the bacteria Lactobacillus which is found in yoghurt and whose main purpose is to bind to the bacteria found on decaying teeth thus halting the decay process from continuing. streptococcus mutans are bad bacteria that will stick to one's teeth and eat away at the protective enamel that coats each tooth, thus breaking the tooth down.

"This bacterium is well established and safe," said Mr Marcinowski who is the executive director at BASF, a German company who is creating the gum in conjunction with OrganoBalance. He goes on to say that the gum "has been tested on large numbers of people and demonstrated the ability to significantly reduce bacterial levels".
